Learning Goal 1. Develop an understanding of major sources of inequality, injustice, and violence.

Learning Outcome 1.1: Students should be able to describe and analyze world-historical processes that give rise to oppression, injustice, and violence, including European colonization, slavery, capitalism and state socialism, neo-colonialism, and neoliberal globalization, and should be able to link local events and social patterns to these larger processes.

Learning Outcome 1.2: Students should be able to define and evaluate patriarchal and racist social systems, including the systemic devaluation and subordination of women and people of color, as well as alternative approaches to diversity.

Learning Outcome 1.3: Students should be able to speak and write in an informed manner on the nature and sources of both state and interpersonal violence, and on the differences between violence and conflict and between positive and negative peace.

Learning Goal 2. Learn about methods of social change that promote justice, equality, and positive peace.

Learning Outcome 2.1: Students should be able to demonstrate familiarity with key practices of nonviolent social activism, movement building, and community organizing.

Learning Outcome 2.2: Students should be able to evaluate major historical nonviolent social movements, both intra-national and international, and identify the contributions of important figures in the history of those movements – in particular, the contributions of women, people of color, working-class individuals, and other unheralded participants.

Learning Outcome 2.3: Students should be able to describe and analyze actually-existing alternative social institutions, models, and processes that promote positive peace and justice, including but not limited to participatory democracy, economic democracy, cooperative ownership, restorative justice, and sustainable development.

Learning Outcome 2.4: Students should be able to demonstrate increased ability to understand and resolve conflicts through techniques of conflict resolution, and be able to apply those techniques to case studies and current events.

Learning Outcome 2.5: Students should gain practical experience with social activism, peacebuilding, and conflict transformation through course-based projects, internships, service learning, international work, and other hands-on activities.

Learning Goal 3.
Prepare for life after graduation.

Learning Outcome 3.1: Students should be able to describe and plan for various post-graduate career pathways, such as graduate study and professional work, and demonstrate an understanding of how to navigate those pathways.

Learning Outcome 3.2: Students should demonstrate continued engagement in peace, social justice, diversity, and human rights issues after graduation from Berea College.
