Required English Major Portfolio: The Major Portfolio of course work and study reflects the student's progress through the course categories, as well as with written and oral communication. The Portfolio is a place for collection of the best and most important work throughout the major. This portfolio should be maintained throughout the major and evaluated regularly by the student's Academic Advisor and/or other Department faculty. Final compilation and submission of the Portfolio occurs in ENG 485, the Senior Seminar.

Admission to the Major: For admission to the English major, applicants must at least be in their second term of the sophomore year and have: 1) satisfactorily completed two ENG courses; 2) an earned minimum GPA of 2.0; 3) an earned combined minimum GPA of 2.3 in ENG courses, GSTR 110 (unless waived), and GSTR 210; and 4) satisfactorily completed an interview for admission to the major, if requested by the Department Chair.

LITERATURE CATEGORIES:

Authors—These courses focus on a specific author or group of authors, guided by an organizing principle that may be centered on concepts, styles, themes, or related influences shared among the works to be studied. These courses may consider authors from different historical eras or nations (including those whose writing is treated in translation). A course in this category might emphasize a single author, or consider significant combinations of authors. See course descriptions for ENG 210 and 310.

Genres—Courses in this category focus on literature and writing based on types of literary and visual texts—prose (fiction and nonfiction), poetry, or drama, or experimental literary or visual forms—or particular audiences. In addition to investigating individual genres, these courses will examine the concept of genre in film as well as literature. See course descriptions for ENG 225 and 325. Or ENG 220 and 320.

Times—These courses focus on the development of national literature (usually British or American) over a period of at least one hundred years. English majors are required to take one offering of ENG 200E (a survey of a period of American literature before 1900, or British literature before 1789) and one offering of ENG 200L (a survey of a period of American literature after 1900, or British literature after 1789).

Cultures—Courses in this category will introduce students to traditionally under-represented literatures. Regular offerings include ENG 135 (also AFR); ENG 140 (also APS); ENG 141 (also AFR); ENG 212 (also AFR and WGS); ENG 237 (also WGS); and ENG 242. This category also can be fulfilled with any 300-level literature course offered by the Foreign Languages program. Also see course descriptions for ENG 205 and 305.

Questions—Courses in this category focus on a specific major question in literary and cultural studies. They are guided by a principle of organization that may be centered on concepts, problems, themes, or related concerns shared among the works to be studied. These courses may take a variety of approaches, including (but not limited to) inquiries based on: history, adaptation and appropriation, aesthetics, and critical appreciation, cultural studies, translation, new media, and narrative.

LANGUAGE CATEGORY—These courses focus on English as a modern language, and may take a variety of perspectives: linguistic; cultural; aesthetic; and historical. Emphasis is on language as a system of meaning. Regular course offerings include ENG 330, 387, and LAT 117. This requirement also can be met by taking foreign-language courses through the 103 level.

WRITING CATEGORIES:

Creative Writing—These courses focus on the art of imaginative writing. Emphasis is on the study of particular genres of writing—poetry, fiction, non-fiction, and drama—as well as the practice of those genres. See course descriptions for ENG 282 and 382.

Professional Writing—These courses focus on writing in diverse professional situations. Emphasis is on the study and practice of writing in such fields as journalism and media, law and public policy, science, technology, business, and grant writing, among others. See course descriptions for ENG 280 and 380.

Composition/Rhetoric—These courses focus on academic writing, including classical rhetoric, literacy studies, composition theory/processes, persuasion, the use of research, and the many forms of the academic essay. See course descriptions for ENG 284 and 384.

Learning Goal 1: Through the reading and study of literature, students will cultivate their imaginations and abilities to discern connections, think about topics and issues from multiple perspectives, and develop insight into the meanings and values of human experience.

Learning Outcome 1.1: Interpret the literary past and present through attention to genre, period, authors, traditionally underrepresented literatures, language, and/or important questions in literary theory and cultural studies.

Learning Outcome 1.2: Articulate understandings of human diversity as expressed in literature by considering race, gender, class, religion, sexuality, language, and culture, among other categories.

Learning Outcome 1.3: Generate skillful readings and synthesize a broad range of texts into cogent and meaningful arguments.

Learning Outcome 1.4: Demonstrate knowledge of literary theory and the complex intersections between literature, criticism, and audience.

Learning Goal 2: Students will gain advanced skills in expository writing and critical analysis.

Learning Outcome 2.1: Compose sophisticated essays of varying lengths featuring a range of textually-based persuasive arguments and research from both primary and secondary sources.

Learning Outcome 2.2: Create skillful close readings of a variety of literary texts.

Learning Outcome 2.3: Produce complex writing projects appropriate for a variety of professional and academic situations.

Learning Outcome 2.4: Articulate an increasing awareness of audience and rhetorical purpose in writing.

Learning Outcome 2.5: Reflect critically on writing and reading processes.

Learning Goal 3: Students will develop their abilities to write creative pieces that are compelling, nuanced, and voiced.

Learning Outcome 3.1: Define distinct creative writing genres and the particular demands and opportunities of each.

Learning Outcome 3.2: Demonstrate a working knowledge of writing craft and practice appropriate to the diverse genres and audiences.

Learning Outcome 3.3: Evaluate the writing of others and give and receive constructive feedback on work in progress.
